

Available This Fall in Humboldt Bookstores

A new view of the universe—this book proves a view of individuals and universe as limitless realization.

Implications—a consequence of the view is that realization is ever fresh—without end. In this account pain is not eliminated but given meaning. The greatest enjoyment lies in engagement—in taking on challenge and risk.

A focus on ideas and action—the briefness of the book enables focus on the essential ideas. The book first explains the new view or metaphysics. It then draws significant consequences. It concludes with notes on practical approaches to realization. For readers who want more, the preface provides the address for the Journey in Being website.

Squaring these ideas with experience—how do these developments square with our experience, especially experience of limits. The picture drawn here is shown to mesh consistently with and envelope all that is valid in experience.

On Being—the idea refers, simply, to whatever exists. Its significance is especially in that it cuts through imprecision in traditional kinds such as matter and mind (the kinds are not regarded as unreal; instead their nature is allowed to emerge with experience).

A Journey in Being—the idea for the term ‘journey’ came from the author’s life and experience of discovery as an experimental, open, and meandering process. Later, Journey in Being came to signify an endless process of discovery and realization.

The author and his inspiration—I live in Northern California. I love to backpack in wilderness areas. The photographs in Journey in Being show places where I have had much inspiration for the ideas of this book.

Trinity Alps—Storm from a Gap in the Trees

Paperback $10.95

Library of Congress Registration TXu 1-864-537 April 26, 2013